Introduction

Replace this paragraph with your introduction and thesis. The first line of each paragraph is indented, the body is double spaced, and the right margin is ragged. Add a source note immediately after the punctuation.[1]

Main Argument

Develop your argument here. Use the four heading levels only as needed, and capitalize their titles yourself. The citation below is a placeholder for a previously cited source.[2]

A Second-Level Heading

Provide evidence and explain how it supports your thesis. Use the next environment for a quotation that would occupy five or more lines of body text. The text inside this example is instructional placeholder text, not a quotation from a published source.

> Replace this material with the exact words of your source. Block quotations are single spaced and indented at the left, without surrounding quotation marks. Preserve the source's wording and punctuation, and add the appropriate footnote after the final punctuation. Check the quotation and its page number against the source before submitting the paper.

A Third-Level Heading

This level is bold and aligned with the left margin.

A Fourth-Level Heading

This level is regular type and aligned with the left margin. It occupies its own line, even though the LaTeX command is named paragraph.

[1] First Last, Title of the Book (City: Publisher, Year), page.

[2] Last, Short Title, page.

Conclusion

Restate the result of your argument and explain its significance. Replace the sample citations and bibliography with your own verified source information.
